13. TRAVEL ON AMERICAN AIRLINES. American airlines are to be used for all official air travel except as provided below.*

a. A foreign airline may be used for direct travel:

- (1) For any segment of a usually traveled route if that segment is not served by an American airline; however, the traveler must transfer to an American airline at the first practical interchange point from which one provides service to continue the journey.
- (2) Where payment for services can be made from surplus foreign credits owned by the U.S. Government, and the American airline will not accept such foreign credits.
- (3) If the traveler, taking a usually traveled route, would be delayed over six hours at any interchange point en route awaiting an American airline.
- (4) When an American airline could not be used in time to carry out the purpose of the travel.
- (5) If the mission requires use of a foreign airline.

b. When travel by a direct, usually-traveled route includes a delay or interruption for the personal convenience of the traveler, a foreign airline may not be used for any segment of the journey serviced by an American airline.

c. If air travel is performed by an indirect route for the personal convenience of the traveler, a foreign airline may be used only when (1) an American airline does not provide service and (2) travel by the indirect route will not result in a greater total use of foreign service than would be necessary on a direct route.

d. A statement justifying the use of a foreign airline for other than instances where no American airline operates between any two points of a traveler's itinerary will be included in the travel order. If a foreign airline must be used in circumstances beyond the control of the traveler while en route, his certification of the circumstances will suffice.
